WASHINGTON — The United States and Pakistan have announced major progress toward resuming a close economic and security relationship on the basis of a five-year program of U.S. aid.

Statements by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. and Pakistani Foreign Minister Agha Shahi, on Tuesday following a day and a half of intensive talks, fell short of announcing a final agreement or of spelling out details of future ties envisioned by the two countries.

In the strongest statement yet on the planned arms sale. Prime Min-ister Menachem Begin's office voiced "profound regret" at the White House decision, saying that it will create a "grave danger" to Israel in the future.

Mr. Begin repeated the warning in a meeting in his office with U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis. Israeli Foreign Ministry officials said that "friends in the United States" would be expected to take into account the prime minister's state-ment, and that "we will do what-ever we can to stop the sale."

[In Washington, the Associated Press reported that the Reagan ad-ministration also may sell early warning aircraft to Egypt.

[State Department spokesman Dean Fischer, in announcing the possible sale Wednesday, did not say what type of aircraft was under consideration but other officials said it was the Hawkeye radar plane. The Hawkeye performs some of the same functions as the Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) plane being considered for Saudi Arabia but it does not have the same range or capability.]

India Prepares to Extract Weapons-Grade Plutonium

NEW DELHI - India has the technology to reprocess spent fuel from the U.S.-built nuclear power plant at Tarapur to yield weapons-grade plutonium, C.O.N. Singh, minister of science and technology.

The minister made his remarks Wednesday in Parliament. A reprocessing plant also is located at Tarapur. The Atomic Energy Ministry said Saturday that two test runs at the plant have been completed and a third trial was being carried out with "metallic

The scientist said the plant is designed to reprocess spent fuel from the Tarapur atomic power plant, fueled by U.S.-supplied enriched manium. An agreement between the two countries providing for the supply of enriched uranium also stipulates that the spent fuel from Tarapur can be disposed of or reprocessed only with the permission of the United States.

In exchange, they reportedly sought an extra $600 million in military aid.

Lobbying Effort

However, the inclusion in the S2.5-billion Saudi package of five AWACS aircraft, coupled with growing Senate opposition to the entire deal, has encouraged many Israeli officials to back an all-out levich America lobbing affort Jewish-American lobbying effort.

The prime minister's statement sought to cast doubt on Saudi Arabia's reliability with such advanced weapons systems at its disposal, saying, "Saudi Arabia totally re-jects the Camp David peace ac-cords, peace with Israel and recog-

Dan Pattir, the prime minister's spokesman, said Mr. Begin elabo-rated on the statement in his meeting with Mr. Lewis, presenting additional arguments against the sale. Adding to the claustrophobic atmosphere was the shelling that closed Beirut's port — reopened

The apparent Christian militia tactic was to keep the Lebanese crisis before world public opinion rather than accept yet another of the lulis that have characterized the situation since fighting first broke out six years ago.

Europe Takes Aim at Wage-Price Spiral Political Pressure Builds to Deflate Impact of Wage Indexation

By Axel Krause

International Herald Tribune PARIS - Throughout industrialized nations, primarily in Western Europe, political pressures are building to ease the impact of the enduring problem of Western in-flation fighters — wage indexation. The controversial system of link-

Superpower Presence Polarizes Indian Ocean Nations it has not been able to outvote a coalition of rightist

Last of three articles on the military buildup in the

By Michael T. Kaufman New York Times Service

PORT LOUIS, Mauritius — The buildup of U.S. and Soviet naval forces in the Indian Ocean is causing growing concern among the 36 countries in the region. The new U.S. base on the island of Diego Garcia and the rapid increase of the Soviet and American armadas are becoming important issues in national politics, and the militarily weak countries feel menaced from East and West.

Essentially, these countries are polarizing into two groups. One clings to the hope that the ocean will be proclaimed a "zone of peace," free of superpowers. The other seems resigned to the idea that the best that can be realistically achieved is a "balanced presroce" of foreign powers.

To a large extent, these two positions largely mask the pro-Western or pro-Soviet positions of the countries in the region. India, for example, which at the meeting of the conaligned oations wanted to condemn the use of Diego Garcia without mentioning Soviet facilities, is the strongest exponent of the zone

On the other hand, Singapore, which does not allow Soviet warships to dock for repairs in its buge shipyards, supports balanced presence. As an Australian diplomat said recently. We talk of a balanced presence but what that really means is we want you guys to be there in force but we don't want "Similarly, be said, those who demand a fully demilitarized ocean often seem to mean that they want the Americans out but had no great objection to the Russians.

The zone-of-peace idea was first raised by Sri Lanka — some say at India's instigation — in the late 1960s, when it became apparent that Britain was abandoning the ocean it had policed so well and so thoroughly for so long.

Mare Nostrum

For nearly a century the East African shilling was maintained at par with the Indian rupee. Under British protection, migrations mixed the populations of Malaysia, India, the islands and the African coast. The British bases at Aden, Mombasa, Cape Town, Colombo, Perth and Singapore circumscribed the ocean. Even in World War II, although Singapore, the Gilbraltar of the East, was captured, the Japanese were never really able to dislodge or challenge

In the late 1960s it became evident to statesmen in the British. many of the countries along the Indian Ocean that come of them could replace the British, nor could they even reasonably expect to project a mare nos-

The African countries in general looked inland toward the continent. Except for India and Austra-ia, none of the countries in the region had real naita, none of the countries in the region had real navies. Australia was largely concerned with the defense of its Pacific Coast, where most of its population is concentrated. India still had a coastal navy but was largely incapable of repulsing ships of great powers except with rhetoric and moral sussion.

In this situation, the likelihood of great-power rivalry was regarded as high. In 1971, Sri Lanka, then known as Ceylon, succeeded in having the issue raised at the United Nations. An ad hoc committee on the Indian Ocean was created. This panel had planned to convene a special conference on the zone of peace in July, but opposition by the West and by those favoring a "balanced presence" has delayed

Beyond Reach

The views of the balanced-presence advocates, which include Malaysia, Somalia, Mauritius and a number of the Gulf nations, were reflected by Michael Cheok, an official of Singapore's Foreign Office. "Yes, of course we would like to see the Indian Ocean declared a zone of peace," he said. "But the reality on the ground and on the water will not allow this ... so we would like to have a balanced situation with multi-powers maintaining parity."

The diplomat said that actions by the Soviet Union had overtaken the plans for a peace zone. He cited Soviet intervention in the Horn of Africa and Afghanistan, and instability in the Gulf as the key factors that put a demilitarized ocean beyond reach. Mr. Cheok detailed Singapore's view of Soviet inten-

At the other end of the political spectrum are peo-ple like Paul Berenger, secretary-general of the Marxist party of Mauritius, the major opposition group on the island; Paul Verges, head of the Communist Par-ty of Reunion; Jacques Hodoul, the foreign minister of the Seychelles, and virtually the entire Indian For-eign Ministry.

Colonial Patterns

Mr. Verges, for example, pointed out that the four main entry points into the Indian Ocean — the Suez Canal, the Strait of Malacca, the Australian coast and the South African cape - are commanded by pro-Western powers. He offered the Marxist view that Western military intervention in the ocean was motivated by the desire of industrialized countries to maintain supplies of African raw materials, thus perpetuating colonial patterns. Mr. Berenger was more skeptical of Soviet interests in the area but still viewed the United States as the major intruder.

"American imperialist, even your machine gims don't make us airaid." signs at a hunger strike of refugees from Diego Garcia in Port Louis pro-claimed last month.

Silvio Michel, who organized the refugees, said his primary interest was humanitarian because the islanders, as they are called, have had great difficulty being absorbed in Mauritius, which already suffers from overpopulation and high unemployment. But Mr. Michel, a university-educated baker who is an activist in the Marxist party, makes the point that like the islanders, the issue of Diego Garcia will not go away. "It threatens the peace," Mr. Michel said.

Mauritian Sovereignty

Mr. Berenger said his party holds the position that Diego Garcia is Mauritian territory. If his party wins elections that should take place next year, Mr. Berenger said, the new government would stop the current practice of allowing warships to visit here.

It would also step up the campaign to have the United States vacate Diego Garcia, 1,200 miles (1,920 kilometers) away. In the last election, Mr. Berenger's party won the largest number of seats, but

Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, the prime minister, who has taken a strong pro-Western position, has been forced by political pressure to also demand the return of Diego Garcia to Mauritian sovereignty, con-tending that it was coded under duress when Mauritius became independent. But be has supported the presence of the United States at the base, which Washington leased from Britain. In effect, he adds, be would like his country to replace Britain — Mauritius and not Britain should collect the rent.

Meanwhile, Mr. Ramgoolam's supporters hope that expected infusions of Western aid and invest-ment will substantially ease unemployment, which is likely to influence the elections more than anything else. The government was gratified by the visit last month of 28 U.S. and British executives exploring the possibility of using Mauritian labor to dredge the harbor and construct runways at Diego Garcia, and of buying Mauritian building materials.

Mr. Gonsalves said it was clear to him that the Indian Ocean was developing into an unstable front in a new Cold War.

"Our assessment is that both are destabilizing the area," Mr. Gonsalves said, referring to the United States and the Soviet Union. But he added that Moscow, unlike Washington, had given India assurances that it favored a conference on the creation of a zone of peace and force reduction talks with the United

PEKING - China's view of Southeast Asia is dominated by implacable hostility to Vietnam's conquest of Cambodia and by a conviction that the event marked a major advance by the Soviet Union in a quest to encircle China and threaten the rest of the world by a military push into the Gulf and Indian Ocean. A series of interviews and round-table discussions with senior officials, professional analysts and responsible journalists disclosed an attitude that a ranking Southeast Asian diplomat here described as "a 1950 psychology" similar to the late John Foster Dulles' belief that the world must unite to defeat a common foe. This attitude was combined with a faith that "right will win out" even if the fairs official said. struggle takes a long time.

A senior Foreign Ministry official reinforced the comparison by Pot forces but declined to comreviving the notion of "containment," a word that had currency s the U.S. secretary of state. The analysts saw no possibility but a protracted war by the Cambodian people against an enemy who is oumerically greatly superior and vastly better armed.

Imbalance of Forces

Wu Zengda, deputy director of the Shanghai Institute for Interna-tional Studies, estimated that the 200,000 Vietnamese soldiers in Cambodia were confronted by 40,000 troops under Pol Pot and about 3,000 led by con-Communist Cambodians. But, the foreign affairs official said, the resistance fighters were making war on two-thirds of Cambodia's territory.

The Chinese conceded that the Pol Pot regime, which enjoyed China's full support during its reign from 1975 until 1979, had made what an official qualified as "a oumber of mistakes in domestie

"Bot saying that Pol Pot killed many people is oot completely true," said Jiang Yuanchun, deputy director of the international department of People's Daily, the Communist Party's central news-

The analysts defended China's continued support of the Commu-nist parties of Thailand, Malaysia and Burma, which are engaged in armed insurrections against the governments with which Peking has friendly relations. In China's view, a continued link to the guerrilla movements prevents their being dominated by Moscow.

Peking Tightens its Rules On Contacts With Aliens

PEKING - A new internal directive has been issued in China that, in effect, tells the Chinese to shun social contacts with foreigners, informed sources said here

Wednesday.

The wording and the exact timing of the directive have not been disclosed, but sources who have seen the document say that it warns people that foreigners are dangerous because they are constantly seeking information.

Chinese contacts, while still in touch, have been markedly more cautious in what they say.

One of the great boous for foreign diplomats and journalists in China since the purge of the Gang of Four radicals in 1976 has been the greater willingness of ordinary Chinese to have spontaneous social contacts with them.

The open attitude reached a peak during the Democracy Wall period of 1978-1979, when Chinese posted their sometimes outspoken criticisms on a wall in central Pe-king and aired their views to for-

The authorities called a halt to the so-called Peking Spring when they decided that the criticism was going too far and that the critics had served their purpose in discrediting the period when the Gang of Four was in power.

The arrest and conviction of a number of Chinese activists followed, but it was still possible for foreigners to cultivate a small circle of Chinese friends.

The new directive on contact with foreigners comes at the same time as a new official crackdown on political opposition, including the detention of a prominent dissident, Xu Wenli, on April 10. Further, the strongest public attack on an author since the death of Mao five years ago took place this week.

Social Discipline

The sources did not know what had prompted the clampdown on contact with foreigners but some diplomats speculated that it was in line with the present emphasis on social discipline.

The diplomats said that the move might also be linked with China's current economic program. Too much contact with foreigners, particularly Westerners, might raise the populations' expec-tations to a level far higher than can be met in China, this analysis

While the directive may curb social contacts, some Chinese are known to be officially allowed to meet foreigners and invite them to their homes.

These Chinese, usually of relatively senior rank, are believed to have to register with the Chinese authorities before meetings with foreigners are permitted.

"We are hardly out of the woods on inflation, and indexation is a contributing factor," a Western diplomat said.

In its most recent assessment of the ftalian economy published last year, OECD said that the impact of "scala mobile," as indexation is called in Italy, accounted for about three-quarters of Italy's wage growth between 1977 and 1979.

During the same period, wage increases attributable to indexation were estimated to have accounted for about 40 percent of the rise in prices of Italian-made manufactured goods, the agency reported adding that "its role has increased in importance by comparison with the first part of the 1970s."

A similar, but weaker, pattern exists in other OECD countries, where indexatioo is well-en-trenched, analysts said.

Referring to a meeting of NATO's ouclear planning group in Bonn April 7 and 8, the article said it provided a backdrop for U.S. Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger to emphasize "the need for further postponement of disarmament negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union, justifying this hy the al-legedly continuing threat to the sovereignty of Poland by the Warsaw treaty countries."

Western Reports

Some Western reports have suggested that the Warsaw Pact forces left sophisticated communications equipment behind which could facilitate rapid intervention in Poland at a later date.

The article said, "The institutions specializing in waging psy-chological war against the Socialist states resolved to intensify the state of social excitement by spreading false information about the alleged preparations to trespass on the Polish borders by the armies of other Socialist states concerned about developments in Poland.

It continued: "Now we know that the fanning of an atmosphere of artificial anxiety around our country was also aimed at creating an appropriate climate of fear, convenient for breaking the resistance of the Western European communities which protest an intensification of armaments and the deployment of new American nuclear missiles on the European continent."

[Meanwhile, the Associated Press reported that the policy-making Central Committee is expected to discuss reforms in the Communist Party's statutes and other matters relevant to a crucial July party congress at a meeting next Wednesday in Warsaw.

(The July congress is to review changes in Poland since the labor unrest of last year and the emergence of Solidarity, the AP said.)

U.S. Aid to Pakistan

The security relationship between the Unit-ed States and Pakistan goes hack to 1954 when the first U.S. economic and military aid program went into effect. Subsequently, both countries participated in SEATO and CENTO, two of the alliances promoted hy John Foster Dulles to keep the world safe for democracy. Some things have changed since then. SEATO and CENTO are gone; China, which was the excuse for the early military aid to Pakistan, is fslamahad's main arms supplier, and Pakistan is building an atomic bomh. But not everything has changed. New Delhi still thinks Pakistan wants modern weapons to make war on India and Afghanistan is still a threat because of the Soviet involvement there. That is the deep background for the current talks between Pakistani Foreign Minister Agha Shahi and Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

The more recent background begins with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December, 1979. President Carter reacted in shock. When he came out of it, he shifted his priorities from nuclear nonproliferation to anti-Sovieusm and whipped up a quick aid package for Pakistan, which was suddenly seen as another vulnerable domino in the arc of crisis around the Indian Ocean and the Gulf. But the package which promised $400 million in economic and military aid over two years, was dismissed by President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq as "peanuts."

Enter the Reagan administration, which did not need to be converted. The Soviet threat was and is seen by the president and the men around him as greater than the danger of nuclear proliferation. As a result, the new U.S. government has no difficulty in turning a hlind eye toward the gestating Pak-istani bomh and upping the aid ante. According to the latest reports from Washington, the United States is considering provid-ing Pakistan with $500 million a year for five years in economic and military aid. A quick visit by top Indian diplomat Eric Gonsalves apparently failed to dissuade the administration from pursuing its plans to beef up Pakistan militarily.

Before a final decision is made, though, the Reagan administration ought to think long and hard about what kind of aid to Pakistan would make the most sense and what the trade-offs would be. India, for example, might be appeased if the bulk of the aid were economic. At the time of the Carter aid offer, the Pakistanis regarded economic aid as the top priority and they may still do so. Chances are Gen. Zia will get his bomh (or would it be Islam's bomb?) with or without U.S. economic and military support, hut it might take longer without it. The Pakistanis have made it clear that they do not want to give up their nonaligned credentials and that they are not eager to serve as a conduit for arms to Afghan rebels. And the general's military dictatorship is not the most stahle on earth. A repetition of fran in Pakistan would be disas-

A friendly Pakistan is strategically important to the Western alliance. There is no doubt about that. But a long-term, highpriced aid program with a heavy emphasis on modern military equipment might buy more trouble than it's worth. A well-targeted economic aid program could do more, sooner, to protect Western interests in southwest Asia.

Prisoner Sands, MP

Just what did the voters of Northern Ireland mean by electing an imprisoned nationalist guerrilla to the British Parliament? To some, the victory of Bobby Sands constitutes an endorsement of the Irish Republican Army and its bloody ways. Some bitter-enders may even hope, ghoulishly, that Sands will persist to the death in his 53-day prison hunger strike. But his death would be a tragedy serving no worthy purpose, and to view his election as a mandate for violence is a shallow distortion.

In fact, it was Bobby Sands' plight, not his politics, that became the central issue in a special election to fill a vacancy. He was put up as a candidate even though he is serving a 14-year sentence for a firearms violation. Sands and other IRA leaders in the Maze prison have vainly resorted to hunger strikes to force the British to accord them the status of political prisoners.

Roman Catholic voters in the district were encouraged to believe that electing him could save his life, and wring prison reforms from his British jailers. He won by 1,500 votes out of 70,000, thanks largely to a Catholic majority. The contest turned into a sectarian plebiscite because the only other candidate was a hard-line Protestant Unionist.

The outcome was less a vote for the IRA than a vote against a criminal justice system that many Catholics regard as harsh and repressive. And the Sands victory only reaffirms what everyone already knows — that many Catholics feel estranged in a Britishruled, Protestant-dominated province. That estrangement will continue as long as the Protestants appear to enjoy an arbitrary veto over every proposal to devise new links be-tween Northern Ireland and the predominantly Catholic Irish Republic.

Yet there is also unintended irony in his victory. How much better it is for the IRA leaders to embarrass the British by electing a member of Parliament from the Maze than on with indiscriminate killing. How much harder it will be for them to persuade their followers that British democracy is a sham. Politics, however cynical, is preferable to violence in the search for a solution to Northern Ireland's intractable conflicts.

A Different Dictatorship

Superficially, Guatemala looks like your typical Central American disaster area. ft's a small, blood-stained country run hy a rightwing military dictatorship regarded now as the most repressive in Latin America. American intelligence quietly confirms Amnesty International's charge that the government runs an immense murder and torture campaign, involving thousands of victims, out of an annex of the National Palace. A Cubanencouraged guerrilla movement is evidently gaining some ground.

All this is, in a sense, familiar. What makes Guatemala different is that the United States does not prop it up. For human rights reasons, Jimmy Carter cooled political relations and cut most military ties. In nationalistic response, President Romeo Lucas Garcia cut the rest. The bloodshed and uncertainty are thinning economic ties. That makes it difficult to hlame the United States for President Lucas' atrocities. It also makes it difficult to apply pressure to make him change his ways.

The point is perhaps insufficiently appreciated. Guatemala called the American liberal bluff. It dared the United States to cut it off, and it seems to be surviving the cut. Georgie Anne Geyer has reported that Guatemala filled the military gap with supplies from elsewhere. Worse, she warns, from Argentina the local armed forces are receiving the sort of sustained assistance that may lift Guatemala out of the customary civilian-military cycle and leave it indefinitely in military hands. To the extent this is so, the United States, by cutting Guatemala off, has spared itself a certain taint but has done nothing to alleviate the country's agony or to relieve the political strain. It may even have made things

At the moment the United States is treading water. The American Embassy in Guatemala lacks an ambassador and a purpose; no policy direction is coming out of the State Department; and those in the Reagan administration who might, on the basis of the tip sheets, favor cozying up to anti-Communist military regimes - even this one - do not seem to have zeroed in on Guatemala. There is no bursting crisis down there, only the kind that builds slowly and surely.

ft is a good time, then, to muli over another approach. The time of the liberal squeeze past. What about a conservative flier? Could the United States conceivably buy back influence in Guatemala hy resuming military contacts? Could the Reagan administration manage to pull off such a gambit without simply becoming partners of Guatemala's gorillas in fighting real or imagined

SAN FRANCISCO - The common estimate is that half the population has fled from San Francisco after the earthquake, thousands from sheer inability to endure the conditions in the devastated city. The terrible strain of the past few days is beginning to tell on the people. Reaction has come and suspense over missing relatives and friends is causing illness, and, in some cases, insanity. One man in the height of the calamity rode through Market Street on a bicycle, apparently imagining himself a physician. With a deathlike appearance, his eyes set and his face ashen gray, he would ride into a crowd and silently hold forth several medical journals, letting his gaze wander wildly over the throng.

LISBON - The garrison in Portuguese Guinea in northwest Africa has revolted in sympathy with the rebels at Madeira, it was learnt today. Color was lent to the story by the fact that a censorship has been established in Guinea and a ship is being armed prior to sailing for the colooy. The Portuguese minister of marine, Cdr. Luiz Correia, has embarked for Madeira, where he is to direct the operations against the rebels. The Madeira rebels flatly refused to surrender. They said they would prevent the landing of troops oo the island until the government agrees to form a Republican-Coalition cabinet to serve as a government of transition until normal constitutional government is re-established.

ONDON — The riots in Brixton have made it pretty clear, if it wasn't already, that inside the heart of most big Western Europe-an cities there is a Trojan Horse of the Third World, young, angry and disaffected, the sons of fathers who fled the lack of opportunity in Jamaica, Turkey, or Algeria, and who now expect it here.

But when they riot, as they have in London, or rent-strike against their living conditions in communal slums, as they have in Paris, or protest the exclusion of their famiies, as they have in Saint Moritz, popular opinion is agitated, bewildered and often outraged.

In France, the Communist Party, for long a defender of the interpretation of the property of the communist party workers have turned on them.

In Britain, the riots have made difficult rational discussion of the Labor Party's new proposals on family

It is true that when they poured in during the dynamic sixties, gov-eraments tolerated the influx withont giving them too much thought. But when recession arrived after the oil price rise in 1974, Western European governments actively worked to reduce the immigrant population. It was the conventional wisdom of ministers and civil servants that the age of the immigrant worker was over. Rising unemployment meant that room had to be made for native workers to take their place.

Even when they were told that the U.S. experience suggested that large-scale unemployment and high immigration could coexist, they chose to ignore it.

Interestingly, just at the time when there is so much anti-immigrant feeling, governments are be-ginning to realize that immigrant workers are here to stay and, more than that, the oumbers are likely to

This comes through clearly in a recent, privately circulated report of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. It notes that "experience has clearly shown that the opportunities for substitution between foreign and national manpower are very limited ... foreign manpower contin-ues to hold jobs refused by nacoo-

Family Reunion In nearly all the Western Euro-pean countries, the immigrant population is no longer being so actively encouraged to return bome. Side by side with this, quiet-ly and without too much fanfare, governments have been making conscious efforts to make the lives of the immigrant population easier. France, after a period of harshness, has gone back to its tradi-tional policy of encouraging family

In West Germany, the regulations governing the rights of family members of the immigrant workers to get jobs have been liberalized and the conditions for naturalization are being eased. In Belgium, moves are afoot to give immigrants the right to vote in local municipal elections, and in Britain, a new recruiting campaign to attract immigrants to apply for jobs in the police force has just been announce This is progress, yet it merely highlights the remaining problems. In nearly all the Western European countries, immigration for new male adult migrants is severely restricted. A large elandestine market has grown up, even though there has been recession, to meet the unsatisfied needs of factories and the service industries. As the U.S. experience has shown, illegal migration serves no ooe but the black market.

President Reagan was right the other day, when discussing the oew proposals for immigration reform m the United States, to call for "open borders." What he didn't say was that the best way to combat large-scale migration is (a) to encourage labor-intensive development programs in the countries which export their surplus labor and (b) to improve the nature and design of low-paying jobs in the industrialized countries so that they

Soares Comeback: Relief and Grief

By Ken Pottinger

Soares from the leadership of Portugal's Socialist Party appears to have been lost amid sighs of relief from the parties in the ruling right-of-center alliance and howls of grief from the Moscow-line Com-

Mr. Soares, vice president of the Socialist International and twice premier of democratic Portugal, is oot only the best known of all na-tional politicians outside the country, but also a charismatic leader in the traditional mold. He and a small group of colleagues formed the party in exile eight years ago and found themselves, minus a constraint of the constra coherent national organization, catapulted into power after the 1974 coup overthrew a 50-year-old dictatorship.
Socialist fortunes dwindled rapidly, bowever, as Portuguese de-mocracy struggled to find its feet and the party suffered two crush-ing defeats at the polls, in Decem-ber, 1979, and October, 1980, when the rightist Democratic Alliance coalition won a majority of parliamentary seats.

Mr. Soares was blamed for the defeats. But in contrast to what usually happens to politicians failing as abysmally as he did, he has made a telling comeback instead of fading away.

Neutrality

The Socialists claimed that thou-

It was exactly this that Soares opponents.

that hoped to change.

They wanted reduced powers for the secretary-general, more internal party democracy and a place. for new blood, including some of the up-and-coming Socialist thank-ers and intellectuals.

If Mr. Soares wants to avoid a party split, he is going to have to take account of these forces—and extremely difficult task while the old guard retains their influence over him. Nevertheless, Mr. Soares' triumph is impressive and certainly an important one for the whole country. It means that while he is in power, the Stalinist Portuguese Communist Party can never hope for any alliance of the left to oust the conservatives from power.

Aware of this, the Communists through their press, mounted a vociferous ditch-Soares campaign which the Socialist leader will never forgive.

As a bourgeois Socialist more in the social democratic mold of other Western European parties, Mr. Soares' hatred of the Comminists is matched only by his knall-ing of the deposed fascist regime.

Rescue Campaign For the Portuguese right Mr. Soares' victory was a great relief: They had mounted a massive rescue campaign for him through their own press, and called a half to all normal political activity pending the outcome of the Socialist congress. Mr. Soares victory means the governing coalition can-now press ahead with plans for a tactical alliance with the Socialists: in upcoming local elections — a move designed to break growing Communist influence in the mu

But a cluster of recent events defines with precision one change that indubitably has occurred. The Watergate spirit is dead.

By Watergate spirit, I mean a pervasive belief that the serious troubles in the United States flow from a concentration of power at the top. Wroogdoing supposedly flourishes as a result, and its su-preme expression is the coverup. It follows that what the country most needs is a change of moral atmosphere — an uprooting of corrup-tion and of old-boy networks, and a filling of the void by air, sun and Established authorities in all headquarters were put on the de-fensive by the Watergate spirit. The initiative passed to confident prosecutors and gung-bo investigators in the press and television.

The recent reversal in oational spirit finds one dramatic example in the case of the Pulitzer Prize returned by The Washington Post after it became known the awardwinning story was a fraud. So much has already been written on that subject that further comment from this quarter seems unneces-sary. But the opening line of the ombudsman's report bears repetition as an apt description of the larger significance of what hap-pened. WASHINGTON - A "new 1973. The pardon was issued by the president before the appeals process had been exhausted and without the normal investigation by the Justice Department. By Watergate standards there should have been a burst of outraged criticism, with alarms of coverup and fix ringing all over the country.

But the one comment in that vein rang false. John Nields, the attorney who originally prosecuted the case, said he was "extremely distressed" because the pardon would "send out a terrible signal - that the government can violate

If that were true, then a case so likely to have ended in a pardon should not have been prosecuted in the first place. But, of course, it is not true. The two FBI officials who broke the law were opportunists, confident they would earn points from their superiors. Instead, they suffered ignominy, a harrowing trial and heavy financial penalties. No one is likely to follow that lead soon again. The Watergate lesson has been taught. It does not need to be rammed

An Irish 'Seagull' Takes Off in London Staging

By Sheridan Morley International Result Tribuna

L ONDON — "Bloody typical," commented John Osborne, when informed that the English Stage Society which he helped create was this month celebrating its quarter-century at the Royal Court Theatre with a new all-Irish adaptation by Thomas

Kilroy of "The Seaguil."

The precise nature of the angry old man's objection is not yet clear. Was it that the Court should be celebrating with a new play rather than a Chekhov revival? Or was it that "The Seaguil" should be left in Russia rather than airlifted to the west of fre-

The former objection is the easier to deal with, for since its beginnings the English Stage Society has been in the revival business. What saved its first year at the box office was not "Look Back in Anger," a slow starter commercially, but a moneymaking revival of "The Country Wife" which made Joan Plowright a star. Moreover within two years, Noel Coward was there directing his own translation of a Feydeau farce starting Vivien Leigh. The news was made at the Court by the new plays, but the money was

The second objection takes a little longer to dispel, since it's the old one about messing about with the classics. Kilroy's defense would seem to be that the demise of the Angio-Irish estates, the existence there too of absentee landlords and the domination of the Land League all provide almost exact parallels between Ireland and Russia in the 1880s.

Thus instead of Madame Arkadina we have Isobel Desmond, celebrated star of the Loadon stage ("Just mention Ellen Terry to her and all hell breaks loose") returning to her Anglo-Irish country home with, instead of Trigorin, the well-known writer Mr. Aston in tow. Her son Konstantin is still Constantine, but Nins has become Lily and the play she performs on the garden stage at the outset has become alarmingly like "Kathleen ni Houlihan" or.

as Isobel says, "another of those Celtie things."

The result of all these transpositions is a jokier but somehow smaller "Seaguil." Anna Massey as Isobel-Arkadina gives the performance of her career, a wonderfully egocentric and neurotic turn, while the casting of Harriet Walter as Lily-Nina, she who was Ophelia to Jonathan Pryce's Hamlet on this stage last year, is no less impressive. True, it is a little odd to have as Aston-Ingorin an actor looking even younger than Constantine, odder still when on that very stage are two other actors (T.P. McKenna as the doctor and Stuart Burge as Peter) who would have been vastly more characteristic casting for the role.

On the other hand we do have a tough, rebellious and mercifully unpoetic Constantine from Anton Lesser. Max Stafford-Clark's directing is crisp and thoughtful, and though I still find it a little anachronistic even for Ireland in the 1880s to have Isobel-Arkadina muttering "Che sera sera," this is a production as powerful and as coherent as any seen at the Court in recent years.

Out at the Redgrave Theatre, Farnham, in Surrey, the resident director, David Horlock, is offering the first professional British production of Noel Coward's epic "Cavalcade" in the 50 years since it was first staged at Drury Lane. Theaters elsewhere, among them both the National and the Aldwych, have been frightened off this project because it demands a cast of around 300 and more than a dozen changes of scene. But by brillant use of an open stage, and an even more brilliant deal with Equity whereby only a dozen of the cast have to be professionals (the rest all drawn from local amateur groups), Farnham has achieved the impossible.

So now, for the first time in the theatregoing lifetime of anyone much under 60, we get the chance to look at the single most ambitious stage concept put together by a British playwright this century. When Coward wrote "Cavalcade" he was just 30, and only a year away from "Private Lives." His intention, having made his name with small-cost comedies and big-cast revues, was to combine the best of both worlds while stretching the resources of stage management to their limits. Thus we have a reasonably small play, about a household of masters and servants and how they survived and adapted to the changes in English life from 1899 to 1929, set within an infinitely larger pageant of historic events from the relief of Mafeking through the Titanic to the end of the first World War and beyond.

In reversing the two last scenes, so that we end not with the cynical "Twentieth Century Blues" but with the jingoistic toast To England" and a mass singing of "Land of Hope and Glory," Horlock has perhaps left us with a false impression of "Caval-cade" as a work of mindless patriotism instead of as a rather more complex hymn of love and hate to Britain. But that becomes a comparitively minor objection when set against his major achievement, which is to have brought back to life a theatrical tapestry many of us had thought lost forever.

Inne Marryot Granville Serton husband and John Hughes as the drunken Bridges lead well for the professionals, but it is in the end the sight of the 300 others flocking onto that Farnham stage to watch the boats depart for the Boer and subsequent wars that makes this "Cavalcade" such a marvelous procession.

"Cantata," as the new work is called, takes its title and its music from Stravinsky, whose 1952 setting of anonymous medieval English verse heralded the new harmonic directions his music was then about to take.

In the ensemble dances, the seven pairs of dancers move in frieze-like lines with linked hands, or groups of three with arms on shoulders. The other lyrics, including the love poem, "Westron Wind," accompany more freely flowing dances with solos and duets.

Nicholas Carr, borrowed from the Ballet Rambert, conducted an accommissed musical performance by conducted an accomplished musical performance by the singers and instrumentalists in the pit, while on

Improvements in Cancer Treatment Increase Probability of Survival

By Jane E. Brody

New York Times Service

New YORK — Recent gains in a patient's chances of surviving cancer reflect improvements in the traditional methods of cancer treatment — surgery, radiation therapy and chemotherapy — and new taeties in applying them to increase the probability of cure.

Several promising new weapons now under study, such as immunotherapy and hyperthermia (heat treatment), are expected to extend this process to more patients.

this process to more patients.

Surgery remains the most common method of treating cancers that form solid tumors, such as cancer of the colon, rectum and breast. Surgery alone can cure cancer that is confined to one spot. Even if the cancer cannot be cut out completely, surgery can reduce its size, which may enhance the effectiveness of other therapies and relieve the patient's discomfort.

Sometimes surgery is used as a cancer preventive—for example, when precancerous polyps are removed from the colon or the larynx. However, cancer surgery can have disfigur-ing or crippling effects when the tumor is in or near a readily visible part of the body, such as the breast, neck or leg, or when surgery means loss of an important body function, such as speech following removal of the larynx. Thus, in recent years, cancer researchers have in-creasingly turned away from the knife to other treatments, such as radiation, that may be as effective as surgery but less damaging to the

Localized Therapy

Radiation, like surgery, is a localized therapy, it takes advantage of the fact that cancer cells are generally more sensitive than normal cells to radiation's destructive effects. Some cancers, such as those involving the lymph todes, are highly sensitive to radiation, whereas others are resistant to its effects,

Many types of radiation are being used —
X-rays, gamma rays (from cobalt or radium). electrons, and still-experimental neutrons and pi-mesons (pions). The radiation may be ad-ministered to a cancer from an external source. or it can be delivered inside the body in the form, for instance, of implanted radioactive pellets. Newer methods of radiation therapy minimize damage to normal tissues that may lie in its path. Radiation may be used to ohliterate a tumor or to shrink it enough to permit surgical re-moval. Sometimes radiation is used following surgery to destroy cancer cells that may re-main to the area. In leukemia treatment, radiation is often used to prevent the lethal spread of cancer to the brain.

Radiation is tocreasingly being used to place of disfiguring surgery to treat early, localized cancers. For example, in early prostate cancer, radiation therapy can avoid impairment of sexual function. For larynx cancer, it can preserve the voice box and tormal speech. Thus far, high-dose radiation appears to be as effective as mastectomy in treating early breast can-cer, but further study is needed to be certain of the long-term results. But radiation also has side effects, among them nausea, vomiting, temporary hair loss and loss of appetite, and in high-dose treatments, damage to normal tissues. Long-term effects, such as the possibility that radiation treatments may increase the risk of developing another cancer years later, have not yet been thoroughly studied.

In the future, high-energy radiation — neutron therapy, for example — may permit destruction of tumors currently insensitive to radiation. Substances are being studied that merease the susceptibility of cancer cells to radiation's effects or that protect normal cells.

Chemotherapy

More than 50 kinds of drugs are now known to he effective against cancer. For many years, drugs were used primarily as last-ditch treatments to slow the growth of advanced cancer. But more and more, they are being applied as primary therapy, or adjunets to primary treatment, with an eye toward cure.

Studies during the last decade have shown that drugs are most effective when used in combinations. Cell-killing drugs usually do not discriminate between cancer and normal cells, and most of the drugs can produce serious toxic side effects. However, hy using combina-tions of drugs that attack cancer cells but af-fect different normal cells, cancer-killing doses of the drugs can be administered without caus-ing irreparable barm to normal tissues. Twelve cancers are now considered curable by drugs in a significant percentage of patients. Most were invariably fatal before the development of effective chemotherapy. Included are acute lymphocytic leukemia (90 percent of children with this disease experience at least a temporary remission and 50 percent can now be cured), advanced Hodgkin's disease, advanced testicular carcinoma, choriocarcinoma (a cancer of the placenta that attacks young women). Wilm's tumor (a kidney cancer in children) and Ewing's sarcoma (a bone tumor).

Even more significant than this success with relatively rare cancers has been the developing use of cancer drugs as additions to primary therapy for more common cancers. Improved disease-free survival as a result of such chemotherapy has now been shown for cancers of the breast, stomach, prostate and uterus,

Many doctors caution against the premature widespread use of such chemotherapy, since little is known about its possible long-term hazards or benefits and the best treatment approaches have not yet been worked out in

Limited Aid

Most patients who now receive chemotherapy do not benefit significantly from it. Dr. Viocent DeVita, director of the National Cancer Institute, estimates that in only about 40,000 of the 200,000 patients currently receiving chemotherapy is the treatment producing complete remissions or preventing recurrence of their disease, "That means 160,000 are not getting better, but they're getting sick from the

The future of chemotherapy promises the development of more effective drugs through chemical manipulation of existing agents, the targeting of drugs more directly to cancer cells, the ability to predict in advance of treatment which drugs will work best in which patients. and new drug combinations and dose sched-ules tailored to a better understanding of how and when cancer cells multiply.

Like chemotherapy, treatment with immunological weapons offers the potential for destroying cancer cells anywhere in the body. It is primarily used as an adjunct to primary therapy with surgery or radiation.

However, right control of the Alexandre right control of the Alexand

However, right now, according to Dr. Alexander Fefer, an immunologist and chief oncologist at the University of Washington in Seattle, "there is no form of immunotherapy that can be considered as established, conventional can be considered as established, conventional treatment. Every immunotherapeutic approach remains experimental."

Though widely touted in the late 1970s — some say prematurely — immunotherapy with BCG vaccine, designed to boost the patient's own response to his tumor, has not lived up to its initial promise and is not now part of any accepted cancer treatment. However, it is still being studied, for example, in treating lung cancer and lymphomas.

Interferon

Interferon, heralded by the American Cancer Society, which put $2 million of seed mon-ey toward its study in patients, has not yet been shown to have dramatic anti-cancer effects. Interferon is a substance naturally produced by the body in response to viral infections. It is one of a number of potential cancer veapons known as "biological response modi-

Though Dr. Frank J. Rauscher Jr., senior vice president for research of the cancer society. reported last month that interferon produced a response of 25 percent to 40 percent in rinitial tests, many of those responses repre-sented stabilization of cancer growths, not remissions of the disease. Thus far, chemotherapy is more effective. However, the tests to patients thus far have form of loterferon, and many experts are en-scouraged to see that it has any effect at all. Newly developed methods of producing loter-leron using recombinant DNA technology will now permit tests using larger doses of pure io-terferon, expected to have a greater anti-tumor

In the future of immunotherapy lies the de-velopment of specially prepared substances, called monoclonal antibodies, which can be targeted to attack or attach to specific cells. These antibodies may be used to search for hidden cancer cells and to deliver lethal doses of drugs or radiation directly to cancer cells without barm to normal cells.

years later. They are compared to patients diagnosed a decade earlier. Experts believe that chances for survival are improving.

The idea of treating cancer with heat is ancient, used as long ago as 2000 B.C. It has been revived periodically through the centuries, most recently to the late 1960s. Studies of beat therapy, or byperthermia, are expanding rapidly as improved methods of applying it are being developed.

The latest available U.S. statistics are for patients diagnosed as having cancer in the early 1970s and reflect survival rates five Hyperthermia can be directed toward cancer to a particular part of the body or applied to the whole body. Its effectiveness is based on the fact that cancers have poor circulation and a reduced ability to dissipate beat. Thus, a temperature of more than 113 degrees Fahrenheit (45 degrees Celsius) could destroy cancer cells while sparing normal tissue,

At the American Cancer Society's seminar for science writers last month, Dr. F. Kristian Storm, a surgeon at the University of California, Los Angeles, described promising initial results from the experimental use of beat-generating radio waves in patients with deep-seat-ed tumors who had failed to respond to conventional treatment. The device he uses, called the Magnetrode, permits the production of high temperatures in specific areas inside the body without injuring surface tissues. Dr. Storm, Dr. DeVita and others predict that hyperthermia will eventually become a major form of cancer treatment, used primarily in combination with other therapies. For example, it may be used to increase the effectiveness of chemotherapy and radiation therapy. In some cases, it may reduce the size of a tumor enough to permit surgical removal. In still other cases, Dr. Storm said, it may be useful as the primary method of treatment.

New Population Center Marks Trend in U.S. To Go West and South

By John Herbers New York Times Service

DE SOTO, Mo. — The center of population in the United State in the United States has moved across the Mississippi River into the limestone hills of southern Missouri, signifying that the typical American is no longer a Northerner.

For the first time in the U.S. history, most Americans live in the South and West, according to the 1980 census.

Although that change had been predicted from population estimates and probably occurred about five years ago, the 1980 count made it official. The establishment of a new population center also serves as a symbol for other changes that have occurred in the nation

Every 10 years, the Census Bureau determines the center of population as the point where the United States would halance perfectly if it were a plane and each American on it had equal weight. The hureau has not yet decided the exact longitude and latitude of that point for the April, 1980, count, but it has determined that it will be in or near this town of 5.993 people 30 miles (48 kilometers) southwest of St. Louis.

In the first census, in 1790, the center was 23 miles east of Baltimore. Through the years it proceeded westward along the 39th parallel, crossing Maryland. West Virginia, southern Ohio, Indiana and Illinois until 1950, when it began to veer a little to the south. Ten years ago, it was just outside Mascoutah, Ill., in a comfield. Moving southwesterly through the 1970s, it was almost to the 38th parallel when the 1980 census found it in De Soto.

If the South and Southwest had not experienced a surge in economic and population growth in the decade, the center might well have moved straight through the Gateway

St. Louis, however, is one of the leading examples of the decay and decline of the northern todustrial cities that sought to huild a society along the Old World model of high density and multiple economic endeavors, a model that has been rejected under the modern mode of population spread and economic change.

The center, moving through mountains and fields for decades, has never been recorded as typical of the country's diverse population. But this time, De Soto and surrounding Jef-Terson County, on the fringe of the expanding St. Louis metropolitan area, seem at least to provide a center that is a more appropriate gateway to the modern West and South than St. Louis would be

Jefferson County, which languished while the great cities grew fat with people migrating from farms early in the century, is now an area of economic and population growth, as are hundreds of similar counties throughout the United States

While St. Louis was losing 27 percent of its population in the 1970s, Jefferson County was gaining by 39 percent and now has 146,000 people. Its gain in housing units, part of a national trend, was even more pronounced. They now total 51,000, up from 33,000 during the decade, an increase of 53 percent.

Another change of the 1970s that is expected to be confirmed by the 1980 census is that most residents of metropolitan areas no longer work in the central cities. The jobs moved out to the suhurbs, as in Jefferson County.

De Soto, too, typifies what has happened to small towns in areas of new population growth. Its population of 5,984 is barely more than it was to 1970. Young working couples settled on farms and in rural subdivisions around the town, leaving the center with an older and poorer population, but with the amhiance of small-town America of generations

mean all that much to us." Bronze Marker

But in the cornfield outside Mascoutah, Ill., a bronze marker commemorating the 1970 center became a minor tourist attraction after it was designated on road maps. The De Soto Chamber of Commerce was quick to put in its brochures an outline of the United States with De Soto as its heart and center.

And Mayor Clifford Day was talking of an appropriate marker.

The town was named for Hernando de Soto, the Spanish explorer, in the belief that his journeys had brought him here. Eddie Miller, a local historian writing recently in the Jefferson Republic said, however, that it might come as a disappointment to residents, but "the explor-er was never anywhere near our vicinity."

Nevertheless, the belief persists, and the name De Soto hlends with the fact that more Americans are living in the areas of the country that De Soto did explore.

Earlier this month, Mr. Rolfes received the final census results for De Soto: whites, 5,868; blacks, 127; American Indians, 2; Asians, 0; others, 7, and Hispanic Americans, 26. There was nothing typical of the U.S. population in that breakdown, hut the preponderance of whites is a phenomenon common to most rural areas undergoing new growth. The 1980 census is expected to show that the latest big migration of Americans is occurring among members of the white middle class, while hlacks and other minorities remain in the central cities and other minorities. the central cities and old suburbs. Even as De Soto was adjusting to the idea of having the center here, the center was moving on, even further to the Southwest. Diana De Are and Larry Long, analysts with the Census Bureau, writing in American Demographic magazine, predicted that the center would stay in Missouri for many years and said that the next movement across a state boundary "is unlikely to be experienced by any person living today."

But that is assuming that there are no surprising changes in a nation with a history of surprise and change.

2 Minorities Are Now The Majority in Many Big Cities in the U.S.

By John Herbers

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Final 1980 figures from the Census Bureau show that an enormous migration of whites from the country's largest cities has left blacks or Hispanic Americans as the majority or a substantial minority in most of the cities of the United States.

The number of blacks increased only moderately in the 1970s in most of the big cittes and declined in some, but because the white population declined the blacks are now in the majority in Baltimore, New Orleans and Detroit — as well as in Atlanta and the District of Columbia, cities that held that status under the 1970 census.

And blacks are close to being a majority to Memphis and St. Louis. In Chicago, whites are now outnumbered by blacks and other racial

The comparative status of people of Hispanie origin, an ethnic group whose members might be white, black or brown, is unclear partly because there were no comparable figures in 1970, but it is plain that their numbers in the large central cities increased substantially during the decade.

Hispanic residents are now a majority in San Antonio, Tex., and in several cities, including New York, Los Angeles, San Diego, Phoenix, San Francisco and Denver, they ap-parently outnumber American blacks.

All Regions Represented

This information is based on final census figures from 26 of the country's 30 largest cities, representing all regions. It does not include cities of less population, such as Newark, N.J. and Gary, Ind., where blacks have been the majority for several years.

All 26 cities are surrounded by predominantly white suburban rings, usually of larger populations than the cities themselves. Census tigures are not yet available for the complete metropolitan areas and regions — figures that should show the extent of the migration of various groups. But the figures for 26 large central cities bear out or exceed estimates that the central cities during the decade lost much of their middle-class population, both white and black. The figures show that those cities experienced the inward migration of substantial numbers of people of Hispanic origin, many of them of people of Hispanic origin, many of them poor, in the 10-year period ended in April, 1980, when the census was conducted.

The statistics for the 26 cides are in sharp contrast to the national population breakdowns for racial groups and Hispanic Americans, announced earlier by the Census Bureau and based on preliminary figures.

Nationally, blacks numbered 26,488,218 or 11.7 percent of the population, an increase from the 11.1 percent in 1970. People of Spanish origin numbered 14,605,883, or 6.4 percent of the p of the population, up from 4.5 percent in 1970.

The Census Bureau warned, however, that the figures for Hispanic Americans could be misleading because, under the racial designation, some listed themselves as white, some as black and some as "other."

Further, the 1970 figures for whites were somewhat misleading because the Census Bu-reau registered those who designated them-selves as Mexican, Cuban or other nationalities as white, whatever their racial origin. Also, > 1. blacks and Hispanic Americans contend they are more likely to be undercounted than other.

groups.

The Census Bureau said that there was an undercount among these groups in the 1980 census, but that it was smaller than in the past. After taking these factors into account, however, the figures support estimates of some trends detected in the decade.

Decrease in Flow to Cities

For one thing, the long migration of blacks from farms and small towns to the large indus-trial cities of the North and West slowed or Philadelphia, San Francisco, the District of Columbia, Cleveland and St. Louis registered a reduction in the number of blacks, reflecting not only a slowing of inward migration but also the fact that many blacks who could af-ford to move followed the white middle class in its flight to the suburbs. Only Detroit showed a heavy increase of blacks in the decade, increasing from 660,428 in 1970 to 758,939 in 1980.

But the preponderance of blacks in Dentit was made more pronounced by the decline in whites, from 238,877 in 1970 to 413,730 in

The increase in blacks was more pronounced in Southern cities than in most of those to the North Memphis, for example, showed an increase from 242,513 in 1970 in 307,702 in 1980. This bore out estimates that those blacks still leaving the farms were set thing in Southern cities, which prospered and offered better job opportunities in the 1970s, rather than moving to other regions as they had done in the '50s and '60s.

Departures From the Pattern Some cities in the Southwestern and Westem parts of the United States - San Diego, San Jose, Calif., Phoenix and San Antonio departed from the national trend and showed; an increase in white populations. But this was partly because, unlike Eastern cities, they were able to expand their boundaries and incorporate with the companies and incorporate with the companies.

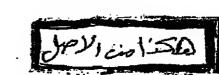

able to expand their boundaries and incorporate white suburban communities.

Los Angeles, like cities elsewhere, lost part of its white population, but not in the larger numbers experienced by Midwestern and Pastern cities such as Chicago and New Yorkwhere the drop was precipitous, even after possible census errors were taken into account.

Baltimore gained only 11,000 blacks in the decade but lost 135,000 whites, a change like put blacks in a substantial majority over whites and other groups. The same pattern was seen in New Orleans, where the increase in blacks was more substantial.

Other racial minorities such as American in dians and Asian groups increased in the large

Other racial minoribles such as American dians and Asian groups increased in the large cities in the 1970s, but with wide variations between regions. The Consus Bureau is still an alyzing the figures to determine the extent of change.

U.S. Backs Direct TV Broadcast to Homes by Satellite The Satellite Television Corp., a subsi-diary of Communications Satellite Corp., By Ernest Holsendolph New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The Federal Communications Commission has opened a new avenue for television broadcasting by endorsing direct broadcasting from satellites to homes and by accepting for ex-pedited consideration a plan by Comsat to begin the service as early as 1985.

In a unanimous vote Tuesday, the five members of the commission provided an opening for other applicants as well to cable television as a provider of alternate television programs for millions of homes.

Acting Chairman Robert E. Lee expressed his awe of the new technology.

The idea of a national station or stations sitting up in the sky nearly boggles the mind," he said.

Microwave Users Affected While many details must be settled before the commission gives final approval to its interim satellite broadcasting policy, probably later this year, the commissioners acted to encourage wide participation in the new form of communication and brushed aside opposition from the broadcasting industry and others.

It put about 1,400 operators of microwave communications systems on notice that they may have to clear out of the 12 gigahertz frequency band because their transmissions may interfere with home reception of television signals from space.

proposes to use a part of the spectrum now employed by railroads, some newspa-pers, utilities and others for internal com-

The National Association of Broadcasters, which has wanted to put the new technology on hold for prolonged study, or wait for Congress to approve it, reacted grimly to the commission decision.

Limited Plan Urged

"Congress should set national policy," said Vincent Wasilewski, president of the NAB, "and any interim approval by the commission is shortsighted. This is a cart before the horse situation."

Rather than have Comsat go on the air in competition for their viewers, the broadcasters have urged instead that satellite broadcasting be used for experi-ments in high-definition broadcasts or for other purposes.

While Comsat has a headstart, there is evidence that it could have some company on its space venture. Members of the commission disclosed Tuesday that a second company, Direct Broadcast Satellite Corp. of Washington, D.C., intends to apply to the commission to provide service.

DBS Corp. promises a different ap-proach. While Comsat wants to provide three channels of its own programiog to the public, DBS wants to launch a system that would be available to program producers to air entertainment on a lease basis. In a brief description of its plan, DBS said that a producer could obtain time on the satellite for as little as $500 or $1,000 an hour and then air programs supported by advertising. The competition feared by the established broadcasters includes out only the struggle to obtain audiences but also the contest for the advertising dollar.

Mr. Lee said he believed satellite service could be a blow to local stations. question of localism surviving in the DBS era is whether it can economically exist on local and regional advertising since national advertising will surely go to the bird," he said.

Narrow Demand Seen

Comsat and various economists, as well as the National Telecommunications and Information Administration in the Commerce Department, have predicted that satellite broadcasting probably will not prove fatal to local broadcasters in the

They predict that the biggest demand for the satellite service will be in remote areas that are not served by cable systems and have poor reception from television stations. The other source of customers, they say, will be scanered seekers of alternative sources of programs in cities not yet served by cable. Existing cable or soon-to-be-built sys-tems, since they provide from 20 to nearly 100 channels, including pay-television, are thought to be in no danger of being un-dercut by Comsat, since it will have only

While it is possible that many other entrepreneurs might now be attracted to propose plans for satellite broadcasts, ssibly setting off a time-consuming contest for available frequencies and orbital slots, the commissioners thought this unlikely.

In contrast to cable which does not depend on broadcast frequencies, there is a limitation on the oumber of satellite sys-tems that can be established. Because of international agreements, the United States will have a limited spectrum of frequencies for satellites and only a certain number of satellites positions able to reach the 48 contiguous states and Alaska and Hawaii

"I think there's enough spectrum avail-able for everybody with a half-billion dol-lars to invest in this," said Commissioner Joseph R. Fogarty.

The United States will not know with certainty how much spectrum will be available to it for direct satellite broacasting until 1983, when the nations of the western hemisphere divide it among themselves. While Comsat and others may be provided "interim" authority to proceed on their plans, they will out get the final go ahead until that regional meeting in 1983.

Philip Morris Gets Interest In Rothmans

From Agency Dispatches

LONDON — Philip Morris
agreed Wednesday to a $350-million transaction making it a partner in some of the Rothmans tobacco operations controlled by South African businessman Anton

The announcement came only a day after the termination of diseussions between Rothmans World Tobacco Group and R.J. Reynolds Industries. Reynolds said the talks were called off by Mr. Rupert, who heads Rothmans World Tobacco Group.

Rupert International, owned by Mr. Rupert, said its Rembrandt Group will sell about half of its 44-percent holding in Rothmans To-bacco Holdings to Phillip Morris. The U.S. firm also will acquire half of the boldings of convertible bonds in Rothmans International held by a Rembrandt affiliate, which would give Phillip Morris around 30 percent of the diluted capital of Rothmans.

The operations and manage ments of the Rothmans companies will continue as before, with Philip Morris participating as an inves-tor, Rupert International said. It said the rights to use trademarks held by Rembrandt are included in the transaction.

Reynolds' approach to Roth-mans had been interpreted as an attempt to bolster the U.S. company's presence abroad and strengthen its ability to compete with Phil-Morris, the world's second largest cigarette manufacturer in terms of unit sales. British-American Tobacco is No. I and Rothmans ranks fourth in world sales. J. Paul Sticht, chairman and chief executive of Reynolds, said be was shocked at the Philip Mor-ris announcement. He said Reynold's understanding during the discussions with Rothmans was that "our negotiating position was exclusive."

Drop TriStar, Lockheed Urged

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Wall Street is hoping - and more than one analyst is betting — that Lockheed will jettison its TriSter jumbo jet business soon and become significantly more profitable. Lockheed's earnings have been penalized since it began producing the TriStar L-1011 in 1971. Lockhood then was in a race with McDonnell Douglas to introduce an airliner that would stand between smaller jets and Boeing's 747 jumbos. But Lockheed ordered engines for its planes from Britain's Rolls-Royce. The jet engine manufacturer went bankrupt and was taken over by the government. Long delays in engine production disrupted Lockheed's plans and McDonnill Donglas stole the march.

While the TriStar has produced losses since the beginning, things appear to have become worse and this has led to "drop TriStar" talk.

and this has led to "drop Tristar" talk.

Harold Hurlocker, publicity representative for Lockheed, said the company had no intention of closing down Tristar.

[Lockheed said Wednesday that Tristar production levels may be less than previously planned for 1982 and 1983 because of a continuing low level of orders, Renters reported from Burbank, Cafff. The company further said that a prolonged continuation of the current depressed market for commercial wide-bodied planes could adversely affect overall financial results of the Tristar program.

But if Lockheed were to do so, the company's highly profitable military and space divisions would raise earnings quickly.

That, in any case, is the view of Alan Benasnli, acrospace malyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Mr. Benasuli called for radical surgery — the TriStor accounted for $950 million of Lockheed's $5.4 billion in revenue in 1980. But Mr. Benasuli called the stee water by the stee that the stee water increases the stee that the stee water increases the stee that the stee water increases the stee water the stee water to be seen to be steen the stee water to be steen to be ste said the step was inevitable and argued that the 1981, Lockheed would lose between $100-to-$200 million overall — the equivalent of $6-to-$12 a

TriStar losses reached $188.4 million in 1979 and $199 million in 1980, reflecting training probiems plus highly disruptive and costly parts short-ages that developed with rising production. He said that after TriStar, Lockheed might experience a jump in earnings from continuing operations of between $9 and $11 a share in 1982. The company earned $1.10 a share in 1980 and is expected to earn $3.75 s share in 1981.

He said Lockheed would have a huge tax-loss carry-forward, and a much improved balance sheet. At present, the company has about $850 million in debt - two-thirds of present capitaliza tion - which could be reduced to about $300 million if TriStar were closed out. Lockheed, which had to be bailed out by the government with $250 million in loan guarantees in the 1970s, has paid off all that debt.

Lockheed is the only U.S. manufacturer of military airlift aircraft. The C-130s and C-141s carry jeeps as well as personnel; the C-5A carries tanks.

The C-130 accounts for more than 50 percent of Lockheed's military aircraft profits and 30-to-40 percent of the company's overall earnings exclusive of the L-1011. Lockheed also builds an anti-submarine aircraft called the P-3. Most of the company's C-130 and P-3 sales are abroad.

Lockheed's missile and space businesses ac-count for 35 percent of earnings apart from the L-1011. Lockheed is the sole contractor for the Po-seidon, Polaris and Trident missiles, all launched by submarines. Lockheed has major contracts for classified military space programs, including high-energy lasers and anti-satellite weapons.

But not all analysts agree with Mr. Benasuli. Eliot Fried, who follows Lockheed for Shearson Loeb Rhoades, believes the TriStar program will not be cut, though commercial operations are a drag. While Lockheed does not believe it can break even on the TriStar, it can approach that point, he said, with continued production even at a lower level. He is not recommending the shares.

London Stock Prices Surge to a Record

LONDON - Prices on the Lon-don Stock Exchange rose to a record in moderate trading Wednesday, closing on the Finan-cial Times 30 industrial share in-dex at 584.3, up 18.2. The previous record was 568.5 April 16.

Jobbers again cited stock shortages in the face of buying by inves-tors who expect industrial profits to start recovering later this year.

GATT Cases Set Record

New York Times Service GENEVA — Apples, chickens, shirts, sugar, cigars, fish and nuts and bolts — these are some of the products that were involved last year in a record number of disputes before the leading international trade forum as exporting countries tried to hold their markets in the face of recession.

In a report published Wednes-day, the 85-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade said that the new high of 13 interna-tional disputes that it had to deal with in 1980 testified to the "severe economic difficulties facing countries around the world."

For the world ecocomy, GATT said, 1980 was "one of the most difficult years of the entire postwar era." Only in 1958 and 1975 did the volume of international trade record a poorer performance than the 1 percent growth last year, the

While protectionist pressures were found to be high in many conotries and international trade disputes numerous, GATT said the 1980 record of trade relations was "far from discouraging."
The poor trade performance was clearly due to the state of the world economy as a whole rather than to deliberate action to close off trade flows," GATT said. Proof of this was seen in the 3 percent expansion in volume of trade in manufactured goods in 1980. Although well below the 5.5 percent growth in 1979, it was still triple the 1980 growth rate for manufacturing output, GATT

Satisfaction was also voiced by GATT because it saw in the record number of trade disputes an iocreasing readiness on the part of the trading nations to make use of its procedures to settle claims.

The usual procedure is for GATT to appoint a panel of independent experts to examine com-plaints by member states of violations of the GATT fair trade rules. Of the 13 complaints ooted by GATT, 10 concerned agricultural or fishery products, with European Economic Community members the target of five, Japan two, Spain two and the United States one.

LOVE, DAD By Evan Hunter. Crown. 407 pp. $12.95.

In the background, naturally enough, are Vietnam, John Updike's "Couples," the moon landing, Chappaquiddick, Woodstock and the Pentagon Papers.

In the foreground, Melissa (Lissie) In the foreground, Melissa (Lissie) Croft, the 17-year-old daughter of a prosperous photojournalist and his speech-therapist wife, is confined for a month to her prep-school campus for dormitory hijinks and for having been present at a party where marijuana was smoked. Though Lissie's dad keeps her company for two of her confinement weekends, he fails to persuade the school's headmaster to lift suade the school's beadmaster to lift her sentence. When the sin of this failure is compounded by Dad's refusal to indulge several other of Lissie's whims, she resents her doting father and begins to slide.

First, she starts smoking marijuana in earnest. Then she drops out of school to live with the shiftless rock musician she has met at the Woodstock Festival. Then she runs off to Europe via San Francisco without troubling to inform her parents of her whereabouts. Pretty soon, she's hitching her way to India, writing intermittently and giving her parents fits.

Meanwhile, friends are getting killed in Vietnam or are committing suicide. Dad has taken up with a young concert flute player because Mom resents his having stunted her career and pleads a headache whenever he wants to have sex with her. And, almost choruslike, a couple of silly psychoanalysts keep sponting over-simplified explanations of everyone's bad manners

What is going on here? Is Hunter simply painting a portrait of the dismal era? Or does he subscribe to one of the many theories that keep cropping up in his story: that Vietnam was the cause of it all, that it was simply a case of the old resenting the young, that the parents were hypocrit-- what with all their drinking and adultery - and the kids saw through them and felt disillusi or that it was all just a natural case of generational conflict?

I'll have to admit that Hunter had me fooled for a while. Partly because of the silly psychoanalysts and all

"Love, Dad." This was probably dumb of me, considering the heavy hints one can see in retrospect. But then, I enjoy being fooled by a story. The only trouble is that as long as one is fooled, one assumes that Hunter is only trying to paint a panoramic portrait of the era. And his scenes and epistolary exchanges are just oot strong enough to hold one's interest for their own sake. There are a couple of exceptions of course, like the night scene at the Woodstock gathering in which Lissie's new boyfriend is in-spired to recite the Chorus' speech from "Henry V" that precedes the Battle of Agincourt. But in general, the major incidents in "Love. Dad" give one the feeling that Hunter is trying to make some point and hurry

On the other hand, once you have caught on to what the anthor is up to, the whole point of the novel seems overspecific. What's worse, it seems in retrospect to endorse that familiar bar-thumping claim that the whole trouble with the world in the '60s and 70s was that the people who grew up in the Depression were trying too hard to protect their children from what they themselves had good through. This claim may well have been accurate, but it was only part of the whole story.

Still, for all its failings, "Love, Dad" succeeds rather well in capturmg the frustration of a father who loves his daughter and can't under-stand why he is losing her, why she keeps evading and lying to him, and why the more he tries to appeal to her the more he seems to alienate her. And for all I know, it catches the daughter's point of view just as well. The oovel may not be exactly visionary in its prose or in its conception of those now familiar scenes of the period. But it's clever enough to manipulate our emotions conetheless.

IN SHELLY'S LEG By Sara Vogan. Knopf. 248 pp. $10.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

THERE are some people I trust when I see them quoted on the dust jacket of a new book, and some people I don't. For a while after the publication of "The World According to Garp," it seemed that most of the new novels I-received bore an endotsement by John Irving. Before that, it was Rosellen Brown. In John Irving's case, his endorsements often seemed to be based on the pluckiness or misplaced confidence of the author. Rosellen Brown's recommendations struck me as having more to do with the politics of feminism than with literature.

On the dust jacket of "In Shelly's Leg" by Sara Vogan, we find enthusi-asm expressed by Edward Hoagland, Raymond Carver, John Sayles and Frederick Busch. I don't know about the reliability of the last two, but I tend to trust Hoagland and Carver, on good writing when they read it. I'm also assuming, just as irrationally, that they mean what they say here. that their only concern is literary criti-

I think "In Shelly's Leg" needs their support, because I, for example, cannot make up my mind about it.
While it has a ring of authenticity, its people also have a ring of irrelevance around their collars. Because they all hannt a small-town Montana bar and drink a lot, we are apparently expected to accept the fact that each of them has a tragic sense of life.

Because they struggle to keep love alive in one way or another, the reader is supposed to see them as particularly human and vulnerable. But even in fiction, a woman ought to be some-thing more than the stretch marks of ove and a man ought to have something else going for him besides rest-lessness. Margaret, the heroine of "In Shelly's Leg," seems to be all labor pains as she fights to hold on to her children, her home and her sense of self. Woody, her lover, plucks at life as he plucks at his guitar, and while that may be the best that he can do, it doesn't seem to be the stuff of which dreams, or first-rate fiction, are made. At the risk of sounding prissy, I have to say that I find the interminable drinking in the book fatiguing. Somebody is always picking up a bot-tle of Chivas to go off and feel sorry for himself or herself, to mourn something. Sullivan, the owner of the bar where everyone hangs out like characters in an existential play, functions as a Greek chorus in the book. He is oldcr, he brings perspective — i.e., bar-tender philosophizing — to every-body's problems.

Sullivan was once in love with a woman named Shelly, who first lost a leg - bence the name of his bar and then died. She talks to him all through the book, a device that seems to make up for the fact that the living characters have so little to say to one another. Bars where groups of people regularly go for heavy drinking are usually elephants' graveyards of sen-timentality, and this one is no excep-tion.

The women in the book are all members of a softball team coached by Sullivan, and this is a nice touch, if for no other reason than that it is un-usual. It may also be a symbol, of women's teamwork, or solidarity, or something like that, but I'm not sure. All I have to go on is the fact that when the catcher steals the pitcher's man, she loses control of her slider. Rita, the catcher, is one of those American Indians in modern novels who are more poetically disillusioned and depressed than anybody. She does have a couple of fair lines, though. Margaret's husband, the father of ber two children, left her because she forgot to put mayonnaise on her sandwiches. As you can see, some of Sara Vogan's ironies are rusty. In current novels by women, all the men seem to leave because their women forgot the mayomaise, the salt or the pepper. Maybe women novelists ought to go back to men who leave because they've fallen out of love or life, or because love is short and life is long, or because some men are simply no good for all practical purposes. It may be time to clean up our acts and wipe the mayonnaise off our faces and our novels.

76ers and Rockets Win

BOSTON - The Philadelphia 76ers and Houston Rockets took to the road Tuesday night to open their National Basketball Association semifinal series - and both came away with victories. Andrew Toney hit a pair of free throws with two seconds left to lift the 76ers to a 105-104 victory over Boston in the Eastern Conference final opener. The Rockets had an easier time of it, with Moses Malone scoring 19 of his game-high 29 points in the second half to give Houston a 97-78 triumph over cansas City in Game 1 of the Western Conference linal. One of Toney's favorite road stops has been Boston. The 6-foot-3 guard averaged 12.9 points per game this season, but averaged 15 against the Celtics. In the season finale here he poured in 35 points and Tuesday night he led the 76ers with 16. The 76ers trailed, 104-103, with four seconds to play when Bobby Jones inbounded the ball from midcourt to Toney in the right cor-ner. The rookie was fouled by Cedric Maxwell on a drive to the basket and calmly dropped the pressure foul shots. 'A Good Call - and a Dumb Play'

"I was just trying to stay loose," Toney said. "This year has been a learning experience for me, and I knew the pressure was on. All I was trying to do was relax and

The Celtics had taken a 104-103 lead on a pair of free throws by Larry Bird, who led all scorers with 33 points. Bird's foul shots had capped a furious Boston rally over the final three minutes when the Celtics wiped out a nine-point

The 76ers, behind 9 of Toney's points and 6 by Jones, had erupted for a 19-4 spurt early in the fourth quarter to take a 97-87 lead. Julius Erving added 25 points and Jones finished with 17 for the 76ers. Nate Archibald scored 20 for Boston and Robert Parish added 17.

"For us in win, we've got to move the ball more. I can't be taking 30 shots," said Bird, who hit 14 of 29 field goal attempts.

Choking on the Line

Philadelphia showed no signs of strain after its seven-game conference semifinal series with Milwaukee. The Celtics were well rested and had not played since April 12. The Celtics (who also dropped their first game here in last season's playoff with Philadelphia) made only 18 of 30 free throws in the game.

"Moses Malone gets the least amount of publicity of any great player that's ever played the game," said Houston coach Del Harris, "People seem to be realizing what kind of player he is now but that's only because he's playing in their living rooms [on elevision during the playoffs)."

Pulling Away

"We contained him in the first half," said King center Sam Lacey of Malone. "He only got 10 points. But he started getting the ball too low and too easy in the third quarter. We've got in make him work a little harder, especially on defense. We've got to take it to the basket and make him foul."

Dunleavy hit a 3-point hasket 35 seconds into the second half to move the Rockets from a 3-point halftime edge to a 47-41 advan-tage. Malone then collected a dunk, a rebound, a blocked shot and a steal in the next 31- minutes to help Houston widen the lead to 53-43. Malone added 12 of the winners' 14 points during the final five minutes of the period to keep the Rockets in front, 66-60.

Tear

The Kings stayed within six, at 73-67, as late as 2:25 into the final period. But the Rockets then went on a 13-2 tear, getting four points apiece from Reid and Leavell to take an 86-69 lead with 5:35 remaining.

The Kings turned the ball over 25 times. "I didn't think our club was as prepared as it could have been," said Coach Cotton Fitzsimmons. "[The Rockets] were a little better prepared than we were. They were aggressive, and caused many of the turnovers. But we made a lot of mistakes.

It was Houston's sixth road victory of the 1981 playoffs. The victory pushed the Rockets, who fin-ished with the same 40-42 regular season as the Kings, over the break-even mark for the first time this year. "Two months ago, who would have thought we would have been in the playoffs?" said Reid. "This win gives us the psychologi-WASHINGTON — Somewhere in the brawl that passes for his life, Billy Martin's one shining skill — his ability to manage a baseball team - gets lost in the shuffle.

Between his hard drinking and his sucker punches, between his firings and his fibs, between his pleas for public sympathy and his attacks on his enemies, the part of Martin that is truly of value gets overlooked. Instead of seeing what is right with Billy, we are distracted by all his fascinating foibles.

For once, in this hour when the Oakland A's manager has set another record - most consecutive victories to begin a season, 11, and a 13-1 mark overall - let's forget the fallible man, who's hard to swallow, and look at the manager, who brilliantly melds baseball analysis and intuition.

Ever since he arrived a dozen seasons ago — winning a division flag as a rookie, then getting fired in the offseason — the notion has taken shape that it was almost an indictment of baseball that Martin could be so good at it.

GOTHENBURG, Sweden The International Ice Hockey Federation has given final approval to the hosting of a six-nation Canada Cup hockey tournament to be held this September. Alan Eagleson, Canada's chief hockey negotiator, said the tournament will be played in various Canadian cities and will include teams from Canada, the United States, Sweden, Czechoslovakia, the Soviet Union and Finland. Play will begin Aug. 28 and finish no later than Sept. 13. Eagleson said the format will be a single round-robin from which four teams will advance to semifinals.

'It's Important to Have That Passion for Living, To Somehow Get It From Someplace

By Michael Zwerin anal Heraki Tribune

DARIS - To call Bruce Springsteen high Poet would oot be an overstatement. Superstar is certainly accurate. Springsteen is the big man on the scene right oow, the one who can put it all together - artistic quality, sexuality and sales. He does it singing his songs with verses

And I'm driving a stolen car
On a pitch black night
And I'm telling myself I'm gonna be alright
But I ride by night and I travel in fear
That in the darkness I will disappear.

He combines James Dean's angelic badboy smile with Jack Kerouac's romantic at-traction to the road, Jack Nicholson's careless love affair with success, John Lennon's concern for human relations and Elvis Presley's raw energy.

Well dartin' can you understand The way that they will turn a man Into a stranger to waste away Down in the Jackson Cage.

Currently on a two-month European tour, Springsteen and his E-Street Band played two nights in Paris over Easter weekend when the town was so empty that a dog could take a nap in the middle of a side street. Like August, it was hard to find a loaf of bread to buy and, once you got past the Champs Elyses, most of the cafes were closed at 8 p.m. oo Saturday: supposedly one of the worst nights of the year to book a rock concert here. So it was a real shock to enter the Palais des Sports in the suhurb of Saint-Ouen and find 8,000 young people screaming:
"Broccoocce!"

He has attracted a vehemently faithful mass audience by writing about the ugliness and alienation of city streets, about how lovers drift apart and how life can lock people up before they know it. Although he does not have Dylan's gift for extended ambiguity, he places himself in the middle of the action with more grace than Lennon and you get the feeling he really cares about his post-Industrial Revolution heroes and heroines.

He was a struggling 22-year-old guitar player, with song lyrics scribbled oo pieces of paper in one pocket and a harmonica in another, hanging around Greenwich Village when John Hammond signed him to a Col-umbia Records contract in 1972, not unlike Bob Dylan when Hammond signed him 10 years earlier. Hammood had brought a young unknown jazz guitarist named Charlie

The song that most impressed Hammond at Springsteen's audition was "If I Was the

Oh and papa rode shotgun for the Fargo line There's still too many outlaws tryin' to work

Springsteen delivers a monologue about how he remembers his father, a bus driver and part-time prison guard in Asbury Park, N.J., lying on the cold pavement under his $200 heap of a car trying to get it started to go to work at 6 a.m. (His parents have since moved to California.) His father looked like John Garfield when he came out of the army after World War II, handsome, proud and full of hope, and Springsteen talks about how that pride "turned to so much bitterness. He'd been so disappointed, had so much beaten out of him . . ."

"There's oot much people can count on today," he recently told the magazine Rolling Stone: "Everything has been so faithless, and people have been shown so much disrespect. . . I guess we just doo't want to let them down. That's probably why we come out and play every night . . . 'cause nothin' works, oothin' makes sense. As long as one thing does, if there can be just one thing that goes against what you see all around you, then you know that things can be different. Mainly, it's important to have that passion for liv-ing, to somehow get it from someplace."

His voice can be deep and caressing like Dylan's, or he can shout anguished, growling double-stops, reaching James Brown's sort of proud underdog intensity. Charlie Parker said that every time he played it was as if it was the last music he would ever make, and Springsteen gives the same impression. You feel that his energy does not come from sniffed powder or injected elixir, that his speed is more an organic impatience with emptiness and neglect. He gives more than he takes and he seems to be spending emo-

On March 3, his manager Jon Landau sent the following cable to their British impresario: "Bruce Springsteen regretfully announced today the postponement of his U.K. tour [originally scheduled for March]. Bruce is simply exhausted and suffering from the assorted ailments that can crop up during a grueling [U.S.] tour. While his health is not in serious danger, doing his first full tour of the U.K. without adequate rest would run the risk of later cancellations." The U.K. dates were rescheduled for May and June.

Despite all the hype at the heart of the rock industry, we somehow believe Springs-teen when he says: "Success is okay, but I don't want the commercial product to take precedent over the human being that I am before anything else. The only thing that I've really learned in life is to remain myself."

I would rather feel the hurt inside, yes I would Than know the emptiness your heart must hide.
